...rge Iraq With ...der In ...ecution Of Two

The execution of two Iraqi Jews in Baghdad was protested in New York by the American Jewish Committee and the International League for the Rights of Man. They termed the hangings outright murder" and "utterly unjustifiable homicide."

Roger Baldwin, chairman of the board of the International League for the Rights of Man, said:

"The hanging of Shalom Saleh Shalom and Yusef Ibrahim Basri was completely and utterly unjustifiable homicide, which should shock the conscience of the civilized world. It is especially regrettable that the Government of Iraq, which often eloquently pleads for human rights throughout the world, should permit its name to be stained by such a terrible miscarriage of justice."

The American Jewish Committee said that the fate of those executed had been sealed before their trial began. It added that several other Jews already convicted and others now on trial might have their fate decided "without regard for civilized legal processes" unless world opinion "makes itself heard at once."

The trial followed an announcement by Iraqi authorities last June that they had discovered several large arms caches and enough explosives to dynamite all of Baghdad hidden in Jewish homes and in Ezra Daoud synagogue. The authorities said the machine guns, bombs and ammunition had been stored by the "Baghdad Zionist Society" supported by the World Zionist Movement and Israeli agents.

The Committee, basing its information on Iraqi sources, charged that one of the defendants was forced to confess, a "confession, the contents of which were not disclosed at the trial, and which the defendant repudiated in open court."

The Committee added that "not a single witness testified during the trial that he had actually seen the defendants throw the bombs or

Bury Sacred Objects, Once Nazi Plunder

Two polished wood boxes, containing sacred Jewish religious objects which had been plundered in Europe by the Nazis and recovered after the war, were buried at Paramus, N. J., in Beth El Cemetery as prescribed by Orthodox Jewish law.

Led by Rabbi Simon G. Kramer, president of the Synagogue Council of America, a funeral cortege of a hearse and five automobiles carrying mourners came to the cemetery from New York to dispose of the objects. Under Jewish law, burning or demolition is to be used only for the destruction of idols. At the same time the objects had to be placed where they could never be defiled. Therefore, burial was required.

The boxes, each of about sixteen cubic feet, were not opened but were said to contain embroidered ritual clothes, parchment scrolls of the law, spice boxes and other objects. Many of the items antedated the Christian era and several museums sought them as historic items. Jewish law, however, forbade their utilization as museum pieces.

A single grave had already been dug by the time the funeral cortege arrived. With appropriate prayers the boxes were lowered, and twenty rabbis and elders, using only their hands, filled the grave with dirt, says the New York Herald Tribune.

N.Y. Youths Try To Invade Parley On Deal With Germans

Thirty delegates from nineteen Jewish organizations in eight countries, meeting in New York to consider whether Jews should seek reparations from Germany, were forced to lock themselves in their meeting room at the Baltimore Hotel to prevent thirty Jewish youths who oppose any dealing with Germany from disrupting the session. Police were summoned but there was no violence.

The organizations, all part of the Conference on Jewish Claims against Germany, voted 18 to 1 that Jews in Israel and elsewhere should seek repayment for Jewish property seized by the Nazis. There were two abstentions. A similar position taken by the Israeli Knesset (Parliament), precipitated riots in Israel.

The thirty objectors, members of Brith Trumpeldor, a Right-Wing youth group, sought admission to the meeting. This group contends that any negotiations with Germany would be morally reprehensible and an insult to the memory of Jews killed in concentration camps. Members of the group invaded the offices of the Jewish Agency for Palestine in 1948, when fighting against the British was going on, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Delegates to the meeting, through Maurice Boukstein, attorney for the Jewish Agency offered Brith Trumpeldor members two alternatives: that one or two representatives of the group would be admitted to the meeting to present its point of view; or that a spokesman for the conference would come out and address them in another room.

David Barzel, speaking for the young people, whose ages ranged from eighteen to twenty-three and who, besides, included two [illegible] refused to be admitted to the meeting.

When no agreement could be reached, the youth group sat on the floor on both sides of the hall outside the meeting room on the first floor above the hotel's second mezzanine, reading prayers, singing religious songs and occasionally rising to pray. Delegates to the meeting who were late were unable to enter because those inside feared that if the doors were unlocked the meeting would be

Men From Eight Nations Back Claims For Restitution

The policy committee of the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, representing major Jewish organizations in eight Western nations, including the United States, pledged support of the $1,500,000,000 claims of the Israeli Government against Germany.

Meeting at a closed session in New York, at the Biltmore Hotel, the Conference also voted to press "for full satisfaction of all other Jewish material claims against Germany including the claims of individuals for restitution and indemnification and of organizations with respect to heirless and unclaimed property."

Representatives of sixteen organizations voted in favor of authorizing the executive committee of the Conference to take "all steps necessary to implement the program of the Conference" dealing with reparations. Agudas Israel, Jewish ultra-Orthodox group, voted against the resolution while the Synagogue Council of America and the executive council of Australian Jewry abstained.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, chairman of the Jewish Agency for Palestine in New York, presided at the policy meeting. He asserted that the "only way open to us for satisfaction of our just claims and demands is to be prepared to deal directly with the Germans." He added that "suggestions that the United Nations or any other body would or could undertake the task of 'go-between' are unrealistic and impractical," reports the New York Times.

Dr. Goldmann said that there should be two negotiating groups with Germany, one representing the Government of Israel "and the other representing this conference." He proposed that negotiations take place in some "neutral spot outside of Germany."

Woman Was Noted As Lawyer On Civil Rights Cases

Mrs. Carol King, attorney who was a recognized expert on deportation and civil rights cases, died in New York in Beth Israel Hospital after a long illness. She was 56 years old. Mrs. King was known to the public chiefly for her defense of such controversial figures as Harry Bridges, West Coast longshore leader; Earl Browder, former national secretary of the Communist party; Gerhart Eisler, internationally known Communist leader, and the "Scottsboro Boys."

She also handled thousands of inconspicuous cases involving what she considered improper interpretation or oppressive application of the immigration and naturalization laws. Throughout her long career she insisted she was not a member of the Communist party, and no evidence of such affiliation ever was produced. At her death she was a member of the law firm of Carol King & Blanch Freedman, 220 Broadway. Mrs. King was counsel in many cases that resulted in decisions by the United States Supreme Court concerning the Bill of Rights, but her role was to prepare the briefs more often than to make the final argument. In 1942, after she had represented William Schneiderman in two lower courts, Mrs. King remained with the case as associate counsel with Wendell Willkie, who made the successful argument in the Supreme Court against revoking the citizenship of the California Communist party secretary.

In 1939, Mrs. King was chief defense counsel for Harry Bridges when he escaped deportation after a hearing in which Dean James M. Landis of Harvard Law School cleared him of Communist charges. [illegible] then she had served as his [illegible] attorney, says the New York Times.

Mrs. King [illegible] the founding and subsequent activities of the United States divisions of the International Labor Defense and the International Juridical Association and later of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Commission, the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born and the Civil Rights Congress.

As general counsel for the latter two organizations, she defended many Communist party functionaries in the Federal Government's recent "Red round-up," as well as other foreign-born who faced deportation.

In a statement the Civil Rights Congress said that "no foreign-born worker's case was ever too unimportant, nor was she ever too busy to help them with their many problems." The International Fur and Leather Workers Union, in a similar statement, said that "if ever a lawyer served the poor and the needy in their struggle for justice, that person was Carol King."

A short, stocky woman of great energy, Mrs. King cared little for fashionable appearance, and was easily identifiable for her heavy, horn-rimmed glasses and her short, unruly dark hair. She earned professional respect for her brilliant mind and her last-ditch fighting spirit.

In 1949, when she was a candidate for the Municipal Court bench, the New York County Lawyers Association and the City Bar Association found her "qualified" for the post. Associates tell of an occasion, after the onset of her final illness, when the immigration official against whom she had argued a case sent her home after the hearing in his own car.

Recently United States Courts of Appeal in several districts throughout the country upheld arguments by Mrs. King in ruling that the Attorney General does not have unlimited powers in determining whether or not noncitizens should be admitted to bail. One of these cases involved Irving Potash, manager of the Furriers Joint Council and a member of the national committee of the Communist party, save the New York Times. Two others, the Eydak and Carlson cases, which she argued in November after her illness had begun, now are before the United States Supreme Court.

Born in New York, Mrs. King was the daughter of Samuel W. Weiss, a prominent attorney, and Carrie Stix Weiss, member of a well known mercantile family. After graduation from Hunter Main School and Barnard College, she earned a Doctor of Jurisprudence Degree at New York University Law School.

10-Year Plan To Make Israel Secure As To Food Is Supported By U.S. Jews

A ten-year agricultural plan for Israel, involving a cost of $840,000,000 and designed to make the fledgling state as nearly self-sustaining as possible in food production, has been started by the United Palestine Appeal in conjunction with the Israeli Government.

Details of the comprehensive project were made public by Rudolph G. Sonneborn, national chairman of the Appeal, at the annual meeting of the board of directors at the Biltmore Hotel. He said most of the money would be provided by American Jews through the United Jewish Appeal campaigns, and the remainder by the Israeli Government. The United Palestine Appeal is the chief beneficiary of the U. J. A. campaigns.

The plan was evolved by officials of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, the Israeli Government and the United Palestine Appeal. The Jewish Agency is the functional arm of the United Palestine Appeal and directs the resettlement and rehabilitation programs of newcomers to Israel.

Mr. Sonneborn listed three basic principles of the program: "Achieve a maximum of local food production at the earliest possible date; accelerate colonization of Israel's undeveloped areas in the Negev and Galil; improve substantially the foreign trade balance in terms of food imports."

The project, he said, is divided into a three-year period of settlement and agricultural development and a seven-year period of consolidating and intensifying agricultural growth. Approximately $592,000,000 will be required for the first period for agricultural production to provide sufficient food supplies for a population of two million persons, he declared.

An additional $308,000,000 will be needed to complete the plan's projects in the subsequent seven years, he added. The plan calls for the establishment of 66,000 new farm units by the end of 1964, Mr. Sonneborn said, explaining that the rural population would be doubled within the next three years to reach 600,000 persons living and working in farming areas, or about 30 per cent of the total population.

In a breakdown of the $840,000,000 total, Mr. Sonneborn said $478,000,000 was required for the 66,000 farm units; $220,000,000 for a network of irrigation projects, and $72,000,000 for afforestation and land improvement. The plan calls for the cultivation of about a million acres.

Mr. Sonneborn emphasized that the principal aim of the ten-year plan was to help Israel achieve self-sufficiency in the production of sugar, eggs, milk, oil and tobacco, adding that vegetables, potatoes and fruits would be produced in sufficient quantities for export. He stressed, however, that "there will still be a need to import about 50 per cent of the nation's meat and flour consumption."

10-YEAR PLAN

gration and the country's limited resources," Mr. Sonneborn said, "makes it imperative that the ten-year agricultural settlement plan is carried to full realization with the aid of American Jews."

Ellis Radinsky, executive director of the United Palestine Appeal, announced that the Appeal's constituent bodies spent $131,313,600 last year for the over-all program of immigration, rehabilitation and resettlement in Israel. He also announced that the United Palestine Appeal would change its name in the near future to United Israel Appeal in keeping with the recommendation of a national conference last October.

At the beginning of this year, Mr. Radinsky said, the U. P. A. had been organized to represent in the U.S. the Palestine Foundation Fund and the Jewish Agency. The Jewish National Fund, formerly a constituent of the U. P. A., will now function as an independent entity and will carry out its traditional collections in this country.

At a dinner-meeting in the evening, Robert Silverman, secretary of the United Palestine Appeal, received a citation to mark "fifty years of dedicated and devoted labors in behalf of Zionism and the rebirth of the Jewish people." Louis Lipsky, veteran Zionist leader, made the presentation.

DAMAGED FRUIT

BY TIBOR FEHER

Translated by Lawrence Wolfe

I remember that day in March very clearly. For the first time in years, I was once again facing an eagerly attentive class of boys. Two of them had an arm each in slings, having been injured by splinters from a landmine during the siege. We adults had forgotten about that orgy of death; pessimistic memory had succumbed to the emanation of adolescent vitality. A chill wind was whistling through the classroom.

"The wind is whistling a tune, sir," said Bocsor from the last desk at the back.

"You can do the same," I replied.

Bocsor began to whistle. The others joined in, but, as it was not forbidden, they soon grew tried of it, and the whistling merged into gusts of laughter. But one face bore no sign of hilarity. It was that of Peter Torma, who sat in the sixth desk by the window, and whose name I did not learn until later.

The boys listened to me with close attention because I was new to the school.

"Is it true that you were in a Labour Battalion, sir? . . . What is democracy? . . . Should we read the papers? . . ."

Thus they questioned me in the ebullience of their new freedom, impatient for my answers. There were expectant twinkles in the eyes of the class as they watched the efforts of the thickset Bocsor, the foxy Pasztor and the diffident Borbas, to fathom the mystery of that most mysterious animal, the school-master. Only Peter Torma did not react in any way. He just sat there in his desk with the bored expression of a moronic adult. His untidy hair, his wooden features, the girlish pallor of his complexion, all combined to give him an aura of insignificance. He seemed stupid and annemic.

I looked him up in the register. Name: Peter Torma. B. Ujpest, 13.5.1930. Parent or Guardian: Mme. Peter Torma, dressmaker. Address: Arrondissement XIV. Palanta-u 1. Remarks: Accommodation: two rooms and kitchen; one other child; father p.o.w.

Poor lad, I thought. So that's why he looks like that. But, after all, some other boys . . . Bocsor, for instance . . . have lost their fathers.

"So your father is a prisoner of war," I said to Peter one day.

"Yes, sir," he replied almost indifferently. "But my father didn't live with us, anyhow. My parents are separated."

I did not pursue the matter then. But, during my next period, I found myself covertly watching him. I could not help it. Somehow the boy attracted me, and my gaze kept straying to him against my will. Then, with a sense of shock, I realised that he too was watching me. It was not the normal attention—genuine or feigned—of the rest of my pupils, who were either interested in the subject under discussion or merely stared at me in order to escape reproof. Peter's eyes and bearing reflected a cautious, restless watchfulness which seemed to be his response to my own compulsive interest.

All this might have been sheer imagination on my part. After all, it often happens that there is something strange about the gaze of this or that pupil at school. Yet, after, this, my entry into the classroom always seemed to mark the beginning of a queer, secret game between Peter and me. The boy would keep his eyes on me to see whether I was looking at him, while I used to squint at him every now and then to see a recurrent gleam of terror which I had detected in his otherwise dull gaze. I developed an unreasoning antipathy towards him of which I was ashamed, but which caused me to pounce on him with questions in my subject rather too frequently. At such times, as though by tacit arrangement, we avoided each other's gaze. He was not doing very well in my subject, though otherwise he earned fairly high marks. He was often absent from school and on his return he would explain with a nervous gabble: "Please, sir, I couldn't rehearse because I had a bad headache again." And he looked at me in such a way that I could not help believing him.

The rest of the class knew nothing about our silent conflict. Peter was a colourless boy, and his fellows were not interested in him. One afternoon in May I saw him standing at a street corner which I had to pass on my way home. When he caught sight of me he turned to face a hoarding and pretended to examine the posters. I paused against my will.

"Don't you wish to talk to me, my boy?" I said.

"No, sir, oh no, sir," he replied with the breathlessness of embarrassment. "I am only looking at this poster, sir. My mother told me to read the new posters because . . ."

"Go ahead, my boy," I interrupted. At this moment the foxy Pasztor appeared, bade me a loud good-afternoon and attached himself to me, talking about football and the cinema. I liked the boys to join me in the street because then they used to talk to me more openly. Just before we parted, I said:

"Say, Pasztor, do you know why this Torma boy is depressed?"

Pasztor did not reply immediately. He stood looking down, as though examining the toecaps of his boots. Then, averting his gaze, he said in a grave, adult tone:

"He is a sinister fellow, sir."

It sounded so comical that I almost burst into laughter. I tried to get him to explain, but he refused.

"I had better not, sir," he said. "Torma might have to leave school . . . Besides, I am not quite sure myself. Please, don't insist, sir; it'll be much better."

"You think so?" I said.

"Well, sir, I really don't know." And he began to sweat.

I did not pursue the matter then, but I could not forget this curious conversation. I went on seeing the "sinister fellow" daily, and our secret game continued as before. I was curious to know his story, but repressed my curiosity in case it led to my having to expel the boy. But what if it concerned something that might harm his fellow pupils? I could not make up my mind. So time passed. In the early summer I noticed several times that Peter Torma was on the look-out for me in the street. One afternoon I spoke to him.

"Can I do anything for you, my boy?" I said. He replied that he only happened to be walking that way. I told him that I was going for a walk in the park and he joined me. He said that he had done his homework for that day, but that he did not like school and was going to apprentice himself to a mechanic after the end of the school year.

"You know, sir, being a mechanic is nice work and they need mechanics now because the war has smashed up everything. I had a friend who also wanted to be a mechanic."

"What happened to him?" I queried.

"He ran away," replied the boy. "To Germany, I think. But I am not sure. You know, sir, he was a member of the Legion. He ran away. I don't know if he's still alive." His voice was tremulous, yet he spoke almost indifferently, with a parrotlike quality in his recital. "It was a big swindle. They promised them all sorts of things, and this is all they got. He thought he'd be something big, because he used to go about with a sub-machine gun and they gave him a lot of money. It went to his head. He's done some round-ups, too . . ."

The boy's talk made my flesh creep. I had visions of reeling, staggering deportees, corpses covered with sheets of newspaper, families driven from their homes and youths with sub-machine guns and bestial faces. And the tremulous childish voice went on, still in the past tense:

"I was very lucky. Just imagine, sir, they almost made me join up too—almost. It would be awful now, wouldn't it, sir?"

"It would, my boy," I said.

"You see, sir, my friend . . . he took part in executions as well. He told me about it."

"What did he say?"

The boy swallowed hard, so that I could see the movement of the tiny adam's-apple in his skinny throat. He kept his eyes fixed on the path before us, as though he were reading the horrors of the past from the ground.

"It was like this, sir," he said. "One evening he came to our flat. Mummy was not back home yet, because she was working very hard in those days. 'Well, Pepe'—(that's what they used to call me)—'well, Pepe, there's been one hell of a do,' he said to me."

"What was your friend's name?" I inquired.

"Er . . . er . . . ", stammered the boy, turning red. "Joseph . . . Joseph Geber."

"Well, what did Joseph say?"

"Er . . . He said: 'Listen, Pepe. We went to a big building in the Thokoly Street, because a caretaker had reported to the Party

Nazis Decided To Murder Jews Ten Years Ago

The final Nazi decision to embark on a campaign of extermination against European Jewry was taken just ten years ago, the Institute of Jewish Affairs of the World Jewish Congress reminded the world. The decision which led to the mass-slaughter of millions of Jews was made at a meeting in 1942, called by Reinhard Heydrich, chief of the Nazi Security Police, and attended by high-ranking officials of the Foreign, Interior and Justice Ministries and the occupation authorities in Eastern Europe.

Heydrich proposed that the Jews in all countries then under Nazi control be deported to German-held Poland. Extermination camps had already been prepared there, and it was generally understood that Heydrich was proposing mass murder. The plan was accepted, and members of the conference were immediately given various assignments necessary for its implementation. Only two of the men present at the meeting ever came to trial, and they are already free men. One was Wilhelm Stuckhard, representative of the Interior Ministry, who was sentenced to less than four years imprisonment; the other was Hans Lammers, Undersecretary in the Reichschancellor's office, whose 20-year sentence was commuted last month.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

LAZARUS-GESSER

The marriage of Miss Gertie Gesser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Gesser, Jeanne Mance Street, to E. Joseph Lazarus, son of Mrs. Belle Lazarus, Esplanade Avenue, and the late D. H. Lazarus, took place at half-past seven o'clock, on December 22, at Bnai Jacob Synagogue. Dr. C. N. Denburg, Rabbi, officiated. The bride was given away by her parents. She wore a gown of white satin, with fitted lace bodice, and skirt falling into a long train. She had a short veil of tulle illusion and carried a white muff with Tea roses. Mrs. Sam. Ponak, sister of the bride, as matron of honor, wore a floor length gown of mauve chiffon, with a matching headdress, and gloves, and carried pink carnations. Charles J. Lazarus, of New York, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were Sam Ponak, brother-in-law of the bride, Hyman Gesser, brother of the bride, and Reuben Reisler. There was choir music. Mrs. Gesser, mother of the bride, received, in a gown of grey silk, with a grey hat, and a corsage bouquet of red roses. Mrs. Lazarus, mother of the groom, wore a teal-blue lace gown, a hat of the same colour, and a corsage bouquet of red roses. The couple are living at 5252 Esplanade Avenue. Mrs. A. Ellner, sister of the groom, of Ain Hashofet, Israel; Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Lazarus, and daughter, Susan; Mr. and Mrs. John Seligman, Mr. and Mrs. M. Oberhand, Miss Marta Oberhand, and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Saginor, all of New York; Howard Meadows and Felix Lazarus, of Toronto, Ont., were wedding guests.

BERCOVITCH-ORLIN

The marriage of Marlene Lynda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Felix Orlin, 1026 Laurier Avenue West, to Edward Bercovitch, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Bercovitch, 5926 Park Avenue, took place at a candle-light ceremony, at half-past five o'clock, on December 9, at Beth David Synagogue. Rabbi L. Kramer, and Cantor J. Dlin officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She was attired in a floor-length gown of white. It had a standing Peter Pan collar of lace, long sleeves coming to points at the wrists, a tight-fitted bodice with padded hips, extending into a hoop skirt of satin, having a floor-length lace apron effect, and ending in a five-yard-long satin train. Her fingertip veil of tulle illusion was draped to a coronet, studded with rotating lines of rhinestones and seed pearl beads, and she carried a white Bible made of mother-of-pearl, a gift of the groom's father, with three mauve orchids and white streamers. Mrs. Manny Label, sister of the bride, as matron of honor, wore a strapless gown of apple-green nylon net, with a taffeta fishtail coat, the gown having a tight-fitted bodice and a hoop skirt. Her Juliet cap, studded with gold and silver beading, was draped in taffeta, and she carried a hand bouquet of Talisman roses. Conie (Saul) Bercovitch, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Seymour Kauffman, cousin of the groom; Manny Label, brother-in-law of the bride, Frank Bailis, Leo Haberman, Frank Yampolsky, and Sam. Genser, cousin of the groom. Barry Blumstein, nephew of the groom, in full dress, was ring-bearer. The altar and canopy were decorated with ferns, palms, standards of gladioli and pom-poms; and the aisle had huge candles, trimmed with gladioli and pom-poms in white, pink and yellow. "Because" was sung. Following the ceremony, a reception took place in the hall of the synagogue. The head table held centerpieces of mixed flowers, and for the other tables there were vases of red roses. Mrs. Orlin, mother of the bride, received in a floor-length gown of charcoal-grey taffeta, with a decollete neckline, embroidered with velvet and beads. It had long sleeves, and the skirt was velvet-draped at the hipline, which was pinned with a mauve orchid. She had a matching headdress. Mrs. Bercovitch, mother of the groom, was in cinnamon-coloured taffeta, made with a mandarin collar, embroidered with bronze-coloured beading, long sleeves, and a tunic skirt trimmed with similar beading. Her headdress matched and she had a mauve orchid pinned to the skirt of her gown. The bride and groom left for an extended trip through the Eastern United States, the former travelling in a brown and gold wool suit, with matching hat of gold, brown lizard purse and gloves, green blouse, with a brown squirrel coat and pale mauve orchid corsage. They are living temporarily at 1026 Laurier Avenue West. Mr. and Mrs. N. Paneky, Mr. and Mrs. S. Blumstein and son, Barry; Miss Sophie Censer, Philip Orlin, and Mrs. E. Coren, all of New York; Mrs. A. Silberg, of Great Neck, N. Y.; Mrs. H. Reichek, of Houston, Texas; Mrs. M. Wolfe, Alec Wolfe, Misses Bella Wolfe and Minnie Sandler, all of Ottawa, Ont.; and Mr. and Mrs. R. Zifkin, of Toronto, Ont., were wedding guests.

On chilly days there is a temptation to forget the outdoor exercise and stay in the warm snug house. Even walking twice around the block will help to provide the necessary daily dose of fresh air. Walking all or part of the way home from school or work helps, too.

WANT TO GET JEWS OUT OF HUNGARY

Delegates to a conference of Hungarian Jews, who said they spoke for 600,000 Jews of Hungarian origin throughout the world, called upon the Budapest Government to allow 130,000 Jews still in Hungary to depart for Israel. The Hungarian Government's quota last year was 3,000.

The conference in Tel Aviv, also asked the Hungarian Government to halt the deportation of what it terms "socially unproductive" Jews from Budapest to rural areas and requested priority for those deported in immigration to Israel.

Dr. Frederich Gorgo, New York lawyer, and Dr. Ernst Marton, Jerusalem journalist, were elected co-presidents of the World Federation of Jews of Hungarian Origin. Ignatz Schuls, of New York, was named executive director.

Medical School Will Be Revolutionary In Teaching Doctors

A new approach to medical education emphasizing seven major untried areas, was described by Dr. Harry M. Zimmerman, newly-appointed director of the medical school at Yeshiva University. Dr. Zimmerman said that revolutionary methods in medical teaching will take place in these areas incorporating the latest advances of the medical profession.

Dr. Zimmerman, who will continue as Chief of the Laboratory Division, Montefiore Hospital, Bronx, outlined some of the plans and practices that the medical school, under his direction, will undertake. This institution will be non-sectarian in every sense of the word. No one will be kept out because of his race, creed, color or national origin. The highest academic and professional standards will be inaugurated for selection of students.

The Yeshiva Medical School will utilize the city's 1,250-bed $36,500,000, Bronx Municipal Hospital Center, with which the school will be affiliated, in developing a top-notch medical center. The school is scheduled ultimately to have a staff of 400, and will maintain at all times "the highest professional standards," Dr. Zimmerman asserted. It will take several months to assemble the nucleus of the faculty.

The opening class will consist of 100 students. According to Dr. Zimmerman, the medical school will concentrate on quality, rather than numbers. Ultimately the college will consist of a student body of 400, which Dr. Zimmerman termed "just about right to enable us to do the best job". Care will be taken to turn out physicians who are thoroughly trained in every respect.

Many unusual features are to be introduced, making the new medical school—this is the first time since 1898 that a New York City institution has undertaken to operate a medical school — a pioneer in many fields of medicine. It is the definite aim of the Director and members of the University's Advisory Council on Medical Education, to develop a medical school which will pioneer in certain aspects of medical education.

Newer methods in medical teaching will take place in these areas:

1. Revision of the traditional medical curriculum along the lines which will incorporate clinical teaching almost from the first day of the entering student. At present, explained Dr. Zimmerman, the teaching in many medical schools is based on a narrow division on subject matter. Each department is compartmentalized. For example, a student may take six hours of anatomy at a stretch, ignoring other subjects that tie in with this field.

Under Dr. Zimmerman's program, all subjects will be correlated early. The clinical disciplines, he observed, should be taught in conjunction with the preclinical. In this way, the student will recognize that medicine deals with the "whole man" rather than with isolated parts.

"We intend to break down the different barriers that now separate the medical subjects," Dr. Zimmerman said. "We will appoint anatomists or bacteriologists, for example, in the surgical department. And by the same token, surgeons will be assigned to the other divisions. This type of teaching is still new, but it is important in present-day medical concepts."

Dr. Zimmerman pointed out that under the current complicated medical system, each specialty has become increasingly narrow. It has frequently reached the point, he added, where "we lose sight of the fact that doctors are supposed to take care of sick people." The Yeshiva Medical School will strive to give the students "a well-rounded medical education."

2. The medical school will pay particular attention to the socio-economic impacts on medicine. Dr. Zimmerman explained that the Yeshiva institution will not take an "ivory tower" approach to economic problems. For example frequently physicians prescribe medicine or expensive health trips that are simply "impossible" for the patient to undertake because of financial reasons, commented Dr. Zimmerman. The curriculum of the new school will incorporate training in the principles of economics. Practical experience will be provided on the effects of family income levels and housing developments on community health.

3. The medical school will develop an orientation to the newer types of medical practice, such as home care programs. This refers to the care of illnesses which do not require hospitalization but can be treated in the homes of the patients. It is chiefly applicable to the illnesses which attend old age, and to chronic disease. According to Dr. Zimmerman, it is just as important for the doctor to make home rounds as it is for him to make ward rounds. Medical students will be instructed in this type of practice. Montefiore Hospital has had notable success in pioneering home care, which can be provided at a fraction of the cost of hospitalization. "Keeping a patient at home also prevents the break-up of families," he stressed. "This is a type of medical practice that must not be overlooked."

4. The voluntary types of group medical practice will also be explored by the Yeshiva medical school. Dr. Zimmerman said that the school will develop a systematized course of study of group practice and will offer seminars on the various types of prepaid medical care.

5. An organized course in ethics will be introduced. The Yeshiva University Medical School, Dr. Zimmerman disclosed, will stress the importance of ethical practices in the medical profession. Emphasis will be made on what constitutes good practice, and the behaviour of the physician as a member of society. "We must train students as human beings and not as doctors whose primary interest is in the fee that they are to make," held Dr. Zimmerman. "Controversial problems should come out into the open and be considered by the students and staff."

6. The curriculum will be revised from time to time to meet changing needs. Dr. Zimmerman explained that instead of the traditional clock-hours assigned to certain subjects, downward revisions will be tried. The time saved in this way will then be used to teach such courses as ethics and other vital subjects. Four years of eleven months each will be required to complete the course of study.

7. The medical school will create a center for preventive and legal medicine. In a city such as New York, he pointed out, many problems arise in the field of preventive medicine. The opportunity is present, he said, in such a large one cup brown sugar

two cups pastry flour
shredded coconut
red jelly

Cream butter and sugar; add two egg yolks, white of one egg, two cups flour, and mix well. Shape into small individual balls. Dip each into remaining egg white, which has been slightly beaten, then roll in coconut. Make hole in centre, place on cookie sheet, lightly sprinkled with flour; bake in 300-degree oven for five minutes. Remove and make hole deeper, then put back in the oven for another fifteen minutes. CHEESE KNISHES

one-third cup oil
one egg
one-third cup sugar
pastry flour
one-half cup milk
pinch salt
one teaspoon baking powder

Mix oil, sugar, and beaten egg, then milk. Add salt sifted with baking powder and about one and one-half cups flour. A little more may be added if necessary. This should form a soft pie-crust dough when rolled out on floured board. Cut in squares, about two-inches wide. In the center of each square, drop a spoonful of cheese mixture, which is made by mixing together: three-quarters of a pound of cottage cheese, one egg, pinch of salt, and one teaspoon sugar. Seal dough tightly on all sides; and bake in a greased baking-pan until brown, in a 375-degree oven.

that there was a ghetto-bug hiding on the third floor.' " (From now on, Peter spoke clearly and rapidly.) " 'We entered the building with our sub-machine guns, with the caretaker leading the way. We went up the stairs and stopped outside the door. The caretaker rang the bell, but no one answered, though we'd heard the noise of movement inside. Then I gave a kick at the door and bawled out that I was going to shoot the lock to blazes. So the door was opened by a terrified woman and she asked what we wanted. She was blubbering, and she kept saying that there was no one in the flat but her sister; but we didn't believe her because the caretaker had told us that he had seen the old Jew. We found him in a wardrobe, together with another one, a young one. We took all four of them to the Party office, and we also carried away three heavy suitcases. When we arrived with the Jews, the Leader praised us and gave us some gin to drink. I had three glasses. After the drinks, the Leader said, 'Well, boys, now you can send them off to the bosom of Abraham.' So we went down to the cellar and jostled the two Jews to stand against the wall. I got the old one. He didn't cry, he only looked at me in a queer way and said something about my father, which I didn't quite understand. Then I just let him have it, and that was that.' "

"Did he say 'that was that'?" I inquired.

"Yes, sir. That is, I don't really know. It happened last winter, and I can't remember the exact words."

"Of course not," I said. "And what else did Joseph tell you?"

"Oh yes, Joseph . . . Well, he told me that they got some money from the Leader. Several hundreds."

"You saw the money?"

"Yes, sir. He showed it to me." The boy felt silent, and we walked on without speaking. It was only a long while later, when we were already out of the park at the other end, that he turned to me again: "I was lucky, wasn't I?" he asked eagerly and with a new look in his eyes.

"Very lucky, my boy," I said. "Sin brings death. It's like the rot which spreads in the inside of an apple. It spreads and spreads until it destroys the whole apple."

"Destroys the whole apple," echoed the boy. We were silent for a time, then, suddenly, the boy paused. "Please, sir," he gabbled in a childish way, "I must go now. I promised my mother——"

"All right, my boy," I said. "But if you wish to tell me anything else, come along to my flat. I'm nearly always at home."

"Thank you, sir," he whispered, and set off at a rapid pace. I stood looking after for a long time. His pace quickened to a run, but he did not look back.

For the next three days Peter Torma was absent from school. On the fourth day a small, fair-ed hair woman staggered into the staff-room.

"My boy," she sobbed, "my boy . . . "

"What's the matter, Mme. Torma?" asked one of my colleagues.

"He's dead," sobbed the woman. "He found a hand grenade last night and started playing with it and it went off and this morning he died in hospital. The doctor said he was raving about a Mr. Balazs."

"That's me, madam," I said quietly. There was a lump in my throat.

The funeral was attended by the whole of Four L. "Peter Torma, aged 15 years," I read on the lid of the coffin. I thought of Joseph Geber. I looked at Paszter, but he did not meet my gaze. A strong south wind was tearing away at the trees and blowing dust into the faces of the mourners.

My First Sixty Years

BY EDDIE CANTOR

It is a difficult thing for a man to review sixty years of his life —especially sixty years as hectic and as full of change as these past years have been. A man in my business must somehow remain young—in spirit if not in years—and looking backward is not the way to do it.

Yet the comparison between then and now is interesting. For example, when I was born, Benjamin Harrison was President of the United States. I'll bet that a lot of the kids who read about him in their history books today find it hard to believe that anyone born during his term of office can still be alive and kicking. In those days, the total population of New York and Brooklyn, which were still separate cities, was scarcely two and a half million. There were no automobiles, no radios—and television was just a gleam in Marconi's eye.

These luxuries were not the only things missing on the East Side of New York during my childhood. We were familiar with cold and hunger. We wore ragged clothes, and lived in tenements. Yet sometimes I think that the lessons we learned in the meaning of America, the meaning of friendship and common humanity, were well worth all the hardships.

We had our troubles but our Americanism and our Judaism helped us bear them. My grandmother, Esther, who raised me, couldn't afford to give me much Heder training, but I learned to be a Jew in much the same way that I learned to be an American. I learned what it means to be a Jew from seeing the way in which Jews reacted to the troubles of others. It seemed to me that this was their special distinction. A Jew who didn't have charity in his heart wasn't a good Jew. We didn't know much about scientific charity in those days, but there was a "pushke" in every home. A Jew was always helping others.

America stood for the same thing. Americanism means equal opportunity and justice for all. It is because of this that not only Jews, but Irishmen, Italians, Russians, Greeks and people of a hundred different nationalities have come to America. To be a Jew and to be an American means to pursue the same ideal. I think I am a better American ,because I am a good Jew and a better Jew because I am a good American.

When I started out, acting was my profession and doing good deeds (schnorring) was my hobby. Today it is almost the other way around. I am proud of my record as a "schnorrer". I have schnorred not only for Jewish causes, but for Protestant, and Catholic causes. The Jews on the East Side weren't raised to see others suffering and stand idly by. When I have protested against injustice, I have protested not only as a Jew, but as an American, because, as I say, it is this indignation against unrighteousness which is the fundamental principle of both.

I think some of you will remember the occasion six years ago when I took advertising space in the New York Times to denounce the British General, Sir Frederick Morgan, who was chief of UNRRA operations in Germany. Sir Frederick, you will recall, took it upon himself to denounce those of us who were trying to aid Jewish D.P.'s in getting to Palestine. He said that we were part of a world Jewish plot, and that the condition of the Jewish survivors was far from being as bad as we said.

General Morgan's statement dramatized for me, and I believe for many others, the tragic fact that Hitlerism did not die with Hitler. In a sense, his statement, vicious though it was, served a useful purpose. It became increasingly clear to hundreds of thousands, and millions of Americans that the struggle for Jewish Statehood was part and parcel of the fight against the remnants of Hitler's philosophy.

To my mind, the creation of the State of Israel is the most effective answer that has ever been given to those who still adhere to Hitler's ideas. The people of Israel have proved, and are proving every day, that Jewish courage and Jewish initiative can overcome the most difficult handicaps. They are proving their ability to work and sacrifice, and die if necessary, for the ideals of democracy and justice.

About a year and a half ago, Ida and I made our first visit to Israel. We saw with our own eyes what we had been talking about for a long time. I can't begin to tell you what a thrill that trip was for us. We saw a land humming with energy and growth. We saw people returned to health and hope after years of a living death in concentration camps and DP camps. We saw clearly, for the first time, the future that these people—our people—are building for themselves and their children for generations to come.

In the short time since our visit, Israel has made great progress. I think that one of the clearest indications of this is the fact that her Government has undertaken the issuance of the $500,000,000 Independence Bond Issue. It takes courage to invite that sort of investment, and the assurance that Israel has the means and the resources to build a strong economy in a relatively few years. It is one of the greatest thrills of my life to know that I have lived to see the day when the Jews of Israel are self-sustaining, when they are strong enough economically to ask for a loan with the knowledge that they have the capacity to work and produce to repay that loan. I am cheered by the reports I get almost daily, which indicate that Americans are responding with great enthusiasm to the opportunity to invest their funds in the future of Israel.

Looking backward over the many years that I remember, I think that the present time is perhaps the most crucial that we have yet to face—as Americans and as Jews. The democratic way of life is threatened in many parts of the world. Even now, seven years after the defeat of Nazi Germany, the last vestiges of Hitlerism have not been fully eradicated.

I hope and pray that I will have the strength, as long as I live, to cry out against injustice wherever and whenever it occurs. I think all of us, as Americans, have that obligation and that opportunity. I feel that support of the State of Israel represents above all a small, inadequate measure of justice for those who have suffered and lost so much. And by granting them this justice, I think we will gain much ourselves. Even in its short history, Israel has demonstrated its ability to contribute much in terms of social and cultural ideas. We shall all be the richer as Israel grows in strength and influence.

The Herut Demonstration In Israel

BY AVRAHAM HARMAN, DIRECTOR, ISRAEL OFFICE OF INFORMATION, IN NEW YORK

The following appeared as a letter to the editor of The New York Times:

May I be permitted to refer to statements contained in an advertisement published in your paper of January 16 by the Zionist Revisionists of America. The advertisement purports to deal with the "truth" about the demonstrations in Jerusalem on January 7, for which the Herut party in Israel accepted responsibility.

The correspondent of The New York Times in Jerusalem, Dana Adams Schmidt, gives an accurate account of the events of January 7, which is in complete contrast to the allegations contained in the above-mentioned advertisement.

He refers to a "mob of 1,000 adherents of the extreme right-wing Herut party." (The advertisement refers to 10,000 Jews who peacefully demonstrated.")

Mr. Schmidt states that the mob "stormed through police barricades, set fire to or demolished automobiles, and stoned the Knesset building." In a subsequent article, published in your issue of January 13, Mr. Schmidt states that after an inflammatory speech which Mr. Beigin made to the crowd "the crowd then began to turn into a mob * * * the mob began to surge up Ben Yehuda Street toward the Knesset, a mile away. It swept aside two barbed-wire barricades the police had set up to control access to the Parliament building, rushed forward and began stoning the Parliament building." These proceedings took place while Parliament was sitting. The Revisionist advertisement would have us believe that what actually took place was that the "police started a riot."

Mr. Schmidt reports that "ninety-two policemen were injured, ten of whom were hospitalized." (The advertisement insists, however, that the demonstrators were "peaceful.")

It is instructive to note that all political parties represented in the Knesset with the exception of Herut have gone on record against the Herut-sponsored demonstration in Jerusalem on January 7. The Haboker newspaper, which represents the General Zionist party, which voted against negotiations between the Government of Israel and Germany, decried the lawlessness of the Herut-sponsored demonstration, which it termed an attack on the honor of Israel's Parliament. Haaretz, an independent newspaper, described the demonstration as an attempt to use terror on the part of one element of the population to impose its will on the Knesset. Al Hamishmar, representing the Mapam party, which also voted against negotiations, condemned Herut for its action. Hatzofeh, the organ of the religious Mizrachi party, condemned the demonstration as an "attempt to sabotage the democratic regime in Israel." Mr. Rokach, the Mayor of Tel Aviv, and one of the leaders of the General Zionist party, who has consistently opposed negotiations with Germany, roundly condemned the demonstration.

Despite this unanimity of judgment on the part of political parties making up the overwhelming majority of Israel's Parliament, the Zionist Revisionist advertisement describes a restrained police attempt to prevent the storming of Israel's Parliament by an unruly mob as "the indelible earmarks of a dictatorial regime of brute force."

The most encouraging feature of the event of January 7 in Jerusalem was the overwhelming display by the citizens of Israel and their elected representatives of indignant opposition to the attempt of a negligible minority to impose its will by force. This reaction may certainly be regarded as a convincing expression of democratic maturity and of a determination to preserve the liberties which have been won at such great sacrifice.

Children's tantrums may often be due to lack of sleep. Fatigue affects children as seriously as it does adults, so youngsters should have a regular bedtime and a number of hours for sleep from which there would be no variation.

Religion And The Child

Text: "And the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord"
(I Samuel 3.1)

All of us love the story of the child, Samuel, as related in Holy Scriptures. It is a beautiful story and of universal interest, for who is there who does not love a child? Hannah was a lonely woman for she was childless. Fervently she prayed for the gift of a child and that prayer was answered. Hannah then dedicated her child and his life to the service of God and the sanctuary. And so we have an impressive picture of a little boy ministering unto the Lord in the Temple. The important fact is that Samuel, when but a child was already ministering in the sanctuary.

This drives home the truth that religion begins in childhood and it is a mistake to treat childhood as a period of mere preparation for adulthood. Childhood is life itself. The child is living, not merely getting ready to live. Hence, it is of vital importance that when the child naturally hears the voice of God that the parents nurture the child's natural hunger for the spiritual. The heart of the child always craves for things of religion. What a pity it is, therefore, when parents neglect, very early in the upbringing of their child, the disciplines of religion which make possible a religious atmosphere in the home.

When Samuel heard the voice of God he ran to Eli to find out the meaning of it all. Eli encouraged Samuel to continue to listen to the call of God. Alas, too often parents of today fail to encourage their children and fail to teach them diligently the word and the commandment of the Torah. Running through the entire literature of Israel is the admonition, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." Hence, instruction of the child must commence early and we dare not postpone and merely wait for the time of bar-mitzvah, or confirmation year to begin introducing the child to a study of Judaism.

Marvellous and glorious is the history of the Jew. Why deny Jewish childhood the beauty and the heroism of it all? Why neglect to give the Jewish child the joys and the memories and the inspiration which can be received from the majestic stories of the Bible, and the heroic tales of Talmud and the poetry of the Psalms? Environment is recognized as a dynamic factor to all living. A home lacking Jewish environment cannot be helpful in training the child for the Jewish way of life.

The Jewish home once more must become a Temple where rests the ark of God, and where burns the Menorah, the light of faith. The Jewish child is entitled to the best and sweetest of Jewish living. Surely, a home denuded of Jewish ceremonials and Jewish observances cannot prove to be a place where the child can have an opportunity to grow Jewishly in thought and practice.

A word that seems to have gone from our vocabulary is that of "mitzvoh". From children on we were taught in the classical life of our people to perform mitzvohs, deeds that find favour with God, good deeds, acts of kindness and acts of charity every day of life. But where today do we stress the need for mitzvohs?

Even as the physical life of the child is of paramount importance, so it is true also of the spiritual development of the child. Along with instruction must be accompanied the example of parents in ways of Jewish behaviour. We cannot afford the luxury of leaving it to the child and fail to participate ourselves as parents in the practice of Judaism. Parents therefore must accompany their children to the house of God and join with their sons and daughters on Sabbaths and holy days in worship and communion. It is not good for the spiritual health of the child when it is sent alone to the synagogue, unaccompanied by parents. But in order that parents be in a position to give to children the best that is of Judaism, parents will have to equip themselves through study of the faith and through an examination of the precious heritage of Israel.

The great Luther Burbank pointed out long ago that weeds are merely unloved plants. Plants that are cared for and loved will not become weeds. This is also true in the case of children. If we give them the proper care and nurture their spiritual life through loving example we shall, indeed, find Jewish childhood responsive to growth in the beauty of Jewish manhood and Jewish womanhood. The call today goes out to Jewish parents that they be literate and intelligent Jewishly. Then there will be the joy of building the happy Jewish home.

Our Jewish world of tomorrow depends so much on our children. Let us train them, let us inspire them that they may continue to be as their forefathers of yore the bearers of that prophetic tradition upon which hinges the very salvation and hope of humanity.

MEDICAL SCHOOL

center of population to stress many aspects in the prevention of disease.

In addition, the question of accident hazards will be considered by the medical school. It is important to know how to prevent accidents, as well as how to take care of them after they occur, Dr. Zimmerman stressed.

As concerns legal medicine, the medical school will participate in the functions of the "courthouse" which is to be built in the hospital. Regular sessions will be held, which will involve various phases of medico-legal education. The courthouse will be used as part of the course in this discipline. An attempt will be made to orient the student as to what his legal rights, duties and responsibilities are.

"The medical school of Yeshiva University," declared Dr. Zimmerman, "will be ever alert and anxious to play a role to get properly qualified people to attack medical problems as they arise. The school will have constructive social consciousness."

These seven "principles", according to Dr. Zimmerman, will permit the school to apply the latest developments in the field of medicine to medical education. The city hospitals now being constructed, with their modern program and facilities, will expedite the work of the medical school. At all times, the medical school will have a fluid interchange between departments. The school will be flexible enough to meet new needs in medical science as they may arise. The hospital bed capacity is such that every phase of medicine can be taught on the grounds of the medical school. Unusually large clinical facilities will be available for the students and for the faculty.

It is estimated that the entire Yeshiva University medical center will cost $25,000,000. A campaign is now under way to secure the money necessary to open the first unit of the center, which will be the medical school. The next unit is to be a dental school, which is expected to be opened by the Fall of 1955.

Construction on the medical building is scheduled to start during the Fall of 1952. The Board of Trustees of Yeshiva University, headed by Samuel Levy, has purchased nearly twelve acres of land adjoining the hospital, at Pelham Parkway South, Eastchester Road and Seminole Avenue, Bronx, which is to be the site of the medical school science building.

"We are indeed pleased that the medical school of Yeshiva University is now leaving the blueprint stage," University President Dr. Samuel Belkin said. "With the inspired assistance of friends of Yeshiva University and the lay public generally, we have overcome the initial obstacles, and are now ready to go forward at a rapid pace. The Yeshiva Medical School will, we are confident, take its place among the foremost institutions of its kind in the medical profession."

Dr. Zimmerman, who is in charge of the academic organization and administration of the school, is a graduate of the Yale Medical School, and an authority in the field of pathology. He is Professor of Pathology at Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons and served as consultant in Neuropathology at St. Albans Naval Hospital, L. I. Since 1946, he has been the senior consultant in pathology at the Bronx Veteran's Hospital at Kingsbridge Road, the Bronx.

In addition, Dr. Zimmerman is consultant in neuropathology to the Armed Forces Institute at Washington, D.C., and is a member of the pathology study section of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. He is also laboratory consultant to Seton Hospital in New York. He is a former president of the American Association of Neuropathologists. Dr. Zimmerman has been associated with various medical publications. He is associate editor of the American Journal of Pathology, and is on the editorial board of the American Journal of Neuropathology and Experimental Neurology. In recent years, he has served as editor of the Proceedings of the New York Pathological Society.

stormed, reports the Herald Tribune.

Police Capt. Thomas Burns and a detective from the E. 55th St. station warned the demonstrators that they were violating the law, that he had enough men downstairs to put them out of the hotel and that the police would eject them unless they went quietly.

While the demonstrators were temporizing with the police the meeting adjourned and several delegates left. Immediately the demonstrators forced their way into the room, brushing aside a hotel detective. Fighting was averted, however, when some one in the room called "The meeting is over, let them in." Thus the delegates and the demonstrators brushed by each other in the foyer, and the demonstrators took possession of the otherwise unoccupied room.

Dr. Israel Goldstein, president of the American Jewish Congress and chairman of the western hemisphere executive of the World Jewish Congress, called the executions "a crude perversion of justice which can only increase tension throughout the Middle East." He termed the trial "a travesty" and said it "represented an attempt by the Iraqi Government to intimidate and terrorize the Jews of that country."
